Whether you're trying to save money on your kitchen remodel, or you just want to give your cabinets a facelift, this guide should help you complete your project.

Before You Begin

Assess Your Cabinets

Before you even begin painting, you should assess the condition of your cabinets to see if they're even worth the time and effort. If they have peeling or discolored veneer, broken parts, loose or other significant structural and cosmetic defects, a fresh coat of paint probably isn't going to be enough to salvage them. Instead, you may want to consider replacing them entirely.

Kitchen remodels are one of the most expensive home renovation projects, in large part because of the cost of replacing the cabinets. But instead of shelling out thousands to replace your kitchen cabinets, you can make them look like new for a fraction of the price with a fresh coat of paint.

The key also lies in how you paint them. Here's how to do it.

Whether you're trying to save money on your kitchen remodel, or you just want to give your cabinets a facelift, this guide should help you complete your project.

Before You Begin

Assess Your Cabinets

Before you even begin painting, you should assess the condition of your cabinets to see if they're even worth the time and effort. If they have peeling or discolored veneer, broken joints or other signs of structural and cosmetic defects, a fresh coat of paint probably isn't going to be enough to salvage them. Instead, you may want to consider replacing them entirely.
